Dear hiring team,

I'm reaching out about video editing, content production, and creative-technology roles where senior editorial judgment and hands-on execution matter equally.

I'm a hands-on video editor and content producer with 20 years behind the camera and on the timeline. I cut long-form YouTube, interviews, launch films, ads, documentaries, and short-form social; I can also shape the hook, direct the shoot, organize the footage, and carry the work through final delivery.

The newer half of my work is AI-assisted production. I build practical systems around transcripts, selects, briefs, footage search, repurposing, and brand voice. The point is not to automate taste. It is to give a good editor better context, faster access to the right material, and more time for the decisions that make a piece land.

At BuildWitt I worked on documentary-style YouTube content during the channel's growth to roughly 350,000 subscribers. I've edited award-winning documentary features, led production teams, and still work directly in Premiere on active client projects. That mix lets me lead when needed without drifting away from the actual work.

You can see the work at jasoncalhoun.net. I'd welcome a practical conversation about what you need shipped first.

Thank you,

Jason Calhoun
